

These graphs show that using the Internet to search for homes is a step that leads to more substantial buyer actions, such as driving past the listing, and walking through the home by scheduling an appointment or attending an open house.

